JUROR BIO & STATEMENT

Janice Lessman-Moss is currently Professor and Head of the program in Textile Art at Kent State University. She received her BFA from Tyler School of Art and her MFA from the University of Michigan. Since 1981, she has exhibited her woven art work throughout the United States and internationally, including solo exhibitions at the Galleria Willa in Lodz, Poland, the Museum of Fine Art and Culture in Las Cruces, New Mexico, and at the Kent State University Museum. She has also received a number of Individual Artist Fellowships from the Ohio Arts Council, an Arts Midwest/NEA Fellowship, and the Governor’s Award for Individual Artist in Ohio in 2016.

While it may not be expected, it seems very appropriate to showcase works of visual art at a state fair. After all, coming together to highlight and celebrate significant assets of the state is a primary function of the event. Educating the public about the rich array of output that emanates from the passion, commitment and talent of diverse individuals throughout the state is an important aspect of the equation. Included in this group are visual artists; a rich cultural resource! Our Ohio State Fair should be commended for the significant commitment it has made to recognizing these contributions through the exhibition of artwork at this popular summer event.

As a juror for “Fine Arts 2017,” I made my initial selections of artwork for this exhibition from digital images projected on my computer screen. This is a customary practice and makes for convenient and efficient viewing of the myriad submissions. It also focuses attention on the basic elements of visual design; color, composition and subject. Understanding of texture and materiality are more dependent on my projection, informed by extensive experience in the field of art, both as a viewer and maker. While scale is the most mysterious aspect of the equation, and relies on the translation of numbers available by reading the description provided by the artist.

In my choices, I looked for a sophistication of design and sensitivity of touch expressed through facility with the chosen medium. I looked for fresh, distinctive or individualized approaches in all the work, including the pieces that embraced more traditional themes – such as landscape, portraiture, still life, etc. Innovative techniques and material applications were considered in light of a successful integration of form and concept. There was an impressive array of work from which to choose, revealing the breadth of explorations and experience inherent to artists in our state.

Selecting the prize-winning entries required a visit to the expansive galleries of the Cox Fine Arts Center on the fairgrounds in Columbus. Art is meant to be experienced in real time and space and this direct physical connection to the objects revealed the intangibles that do not translate in visual reproductions or words. The vision, and sensibility of the artist, as reflected in the scale of the work, craftsmanship, and the finessing of subject matter/process, were important considerations in choosing the awardees. Ultimately, our selections revealed a level of mastery and innovation. Several additional works stood out as worthy of recognition, but alas the awards were limited in number and determined in concord with my fellow juror. I acknowledge all the artists, thank them for their submissions, commend them for their dedicated work, and recognize the contributions they make to the creative culture in Ohio.

JUROR BIO & STATEMENT

Dutch native Petra Fallaux is a writer, curator, and artist based in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. She received degrees in psychology (BS) and film studies (MS) from the University of Leiden and Amsterdam in the Netherlands and earned a Master of Arts Management degree from Carnegie Mellon University. Upon graduation, she directed Carnegie Mellon’s art galleries for over ten years and curated well over one hundred exhibitions in a variety of media ranging from quilts, paintings, prints, photography, sculpture, video, architecture, and design, to multi-media and site-specific installations. Since 2003, Petra has helped direct Springboard Design, whose work includes museum, exhibition and public interest design, while also working as an independent writer, curator and artist. She is co-curator of 125SF, Pittsburgh’s smallest art gallery, which was launched by Springboard in October of 2016. As an active artist, Petra’s approach to making quilts is grounded in art. Modern painting and design - graphic, interior or architectural - are major influences.

To be asked to select an art exhibition from among so many talented artists is a responsibility I thoroughly enjoy. I especially look forward to the opportunity to see a body of work by artists connected by time and place. The Ohio State Fair Fine Arts division is such an occasion on a statewide scale. I want to thank fellow juror Janice Lessman-Moss, and directors Sandy Libertini and Chaz O’Neil, for keeping the enormous task organized and a delight to take part in.

Works of art that attract my attention have a clear focus, evident skills, and a strong visual presence. None of these criteria can be measured or observed with pure objectivity, although focus, skill and composition present themselves readily. However, what engages me in a work of art is not necessarily the same thing that draws in somebody else.

When viewing so many works at one time online, themes emerge: many artists skillfully pursue perfecting their marks, while other decisively delve into material experimentation. As I took in the selected works in person in the large expanses of the Cox Fine Arts Center, additional unexpected connections and associations appeared: stillness and exuberance, figure and texture, quiet contemplation and raised voices all find one another. What a pleasure to discover so many distinct flavors and compelling dialogues!

In Kaitlin Shae’s Cosmic Figures Series (Best of Show), her out-of-the-box pursuit of integrating discarded recycled materials into an established weaving practice excite me. The resulting figures have colorful animated identities within a variety of outer forms. They are woven together into a family that leads me to ponder the human condition, how alike - and yet different - we all are.

The quiet contemplative intimacy and beauty of Christopher Bunk’s gouache Nocturne Not (3rd Best of Show) emerged as a clear winner, as did Nikos Rutkowski’s Elegy for the Republic (2nd Best in Show). The painted exuberance of James March’s Quantum Space, and the tightly drawn composition of Lindsey Rodgers’ The Ever-Youthful Mercury (Juror’s choices), completed the list of main award winners. Special awards went to Eliana Saari’s My Angels for printmaking and Christina Peryema (Remnant) and Chris Mercerhill (Ohio Star) won opportunities to attend a Crow Timber Frame barn workshop. Many other works stood out to me, leaving me feeling happy, inspired, and privileged to be working in the arts.

Life as a studio artist can feel isolated and insular. Seeing one’s efforts exhibited amongst the work of so many kindred spirits offers an opportunity for reflection and renewal. It makes an audience out of us all: artists, jurors, patrons and visitors alike. This grand exhibition exuberantly honors the Ohio artist community, celebrates the making of art and inspires future work. Whether in fiber, metal or clay, on paper or canvas, two- or three-dimensional, I hope that the synergies between the accepted works will delight everyone. Above all, I hope this exhibition offers many an opportunity to be inspired. Go in search of what stands out to you!

JUROR BIO & STATEMENT

Jason Franz is Co-founder, Executive Director, and Chief Curator of Manifest Creative Research Gallery and Drawing Center, a nonprofit arts organization headquartered in Cincinnati, Ohio founded in 2004.

As the chief operating officer of Manifest, Jason Franz is involved in every aspect of the organization and oversees all programs. On the ground, he coordinates the project submission process, jury process, and programming for exhibits and books as well as serving as the organization’s primary grant writer. He is the first point of contact for most communications regarding projects and Manifest’s programming and philosophy. He also designs Manifest’s publications, exhibit layouts, and PR materials. As an artist and educator Jason Franz is the recipient of numerous grants and awards, including an Ohio Arts Council Fellowship, a Xavier University Faculty Development Grant, two Darwin Turner teaching awards from the University of Cincinnati, and three Summerfair Individual Artist Grants. In 2009, he was recognized with a Distinguished Alumnus Award from the Art Academy of Cincinnati.

To an educator, the designation of ‘amateur’ comes as a challenge and an invitation. In other contexts, the term is used as a euphemism in place of ‘unqualified’ or ‘inexperienced’ sometimes levied as an insult. To me the distinction between professional and amateur is a foggy terrain I have learned to distrust in the world of art. “Amateur” essentially means one who pursues a discipline unpaid—and as such the term applies to a great many quite qualified and highly trained artists, even masters in their fields. “Professional” on the other hand, refers to one who pursues a discipline that requires special training or skill—the pay factor is merely assumed. As an educator, I specialize in changing amateurs or novices into professionals. As a curator of exhibitions, I specialize in coordinating the distinction and selection of works exemplifying a high degree of excellence, regardless of the makers’ status. So it was from these standpoints that I was confronted with the two designations, selected by the artists themselves, in two divisions of the 2017 Ohio State Fair exhibition, and charged with selecting and then rewarding the works in the Amateur division.

In either case, quality is of utmost concern for me. One need not be highly trained, nor paid, to make a work of art that embodies essential creative principles and emanates vitality in such a way as to lure the viewer into its orbit. Quality is something that can be measured like a ray of sunshine, and put to work or appreciated by anyone with sensitivity. And humans, by and large, have a great capability for being sensitive. It was a pleasure to find so much quality and sensitivity within the works presented in this exhibition, and across such a wide range of media, styles, and approaches. Furthermore, I was inspired by many works whose gravity persisted, even with my back turned or from the far side of the exhibition space, to such a degree that I returned multiple times to confirm and absorb the energy the artists had bestowed upon them. While these gems are found throughout the exhibition at odd intervals, they reveal a magic that does not conform to artificial designations, categorization, or status.

INTRODUCING THE NEW ALL OHIO ARTS GIFT SHOP AT THE COX FINE ARTS CENTER

OPEN 11A-7P, JULY 26-AUGUST 5
AND 11A-6P, AUGUST 6

AN OPPORTUNITY TO FEATURE
OHIO ARTS ORGANIZATIONS, THEIR PROGRAMS, MISSIONS,
ARTISTS AND ART!

Glass Axis July 26-29

Founded in 1987, ten students and graduates of The Ohio State University Glass Program came together under the name Glass Axis. The group built a portable glass blowing studio and traveled all over Central Ohio teaching glass art, with a focus on the Greater Columbus Arts Council's Artists-in-Schools Program. Five years later, the organization (by then, 20 members strong) established a more rooted glassmaking studio in what is now Columbus' Arena District and in 2001 moved to the Grandview area of Columbus. Since then, Glass Axis has grown to over 120 members and includes amateur and professional artists. In 2014, Glass Axis made yet another move to a larger space in the East Franklinton area. This space is a comprehensive glass-making facility, encompassing molten glass, casting, fusing, neon, stained glass, cold working, and torch working. The space offers first-class facilities to glass artists in all stages of development, hundreds of classes and public programs each year, exhibition and retail space, high school and college internship programs, and a work credit program to help keep artists in the studio. Glass Axis has become a civic hub for glass art creation and learning and is a place of cultural equity that continues to adapt and grow.

Mission: Creating opportunities and advancing education through glass art.

Studios on High July 30-August 2

Located in the energetic Short North Arts District since 1985, Studios on High Gallery is Columbus' oldest artist-owned and operated gallery. Selected by jury, each exhibiting artist participates in staffing the gallery, while simultaneously creating art on-site. This provides a rare opportunity for art patrons to meet the artists personally and engage with their creative processes. The gallery offers oil, acrylic, and watercolor paintings, jewelry, glass, wearables, collages, mosaics, ceramics, and sculpture.

Mission: To provide a professional, continuous space for gallery artists to exhibit their original artwork, and for clients and visitors to buy directly from member artists. To foster educational outreach and genuine understanding and appreciation for original art as members demonstrate their creative processes while staffing the gallery.

Sunapple Studio & Goodwill Art Studios & Gallery August 3-6

The Sunapple program helps to change assumptions about the abilities of people with disabilities. A true community is one that values diversity, believes that all people deserve a living wage, and supports the idea that everyone has something important to contribute. Magic happens every single day in the Sunapple studio! The artists' work in a variety of media and are supported in the exploration of their talents by staff and teaching consultants. The Sunapple product line includes a diversity of art products, from unique garden ornaments and herb markers to fine art paintings and prints. Sunapple artists have also created custom-designed commissioned pieces for companies and retail spaces. See our web site for more information and stories.

Goodwill Art Studios and Gallery provide income opportunities selling artwork on consignment. Artists receive 50% of the artwork sale price and the other 50% supports Art Studio and Gallery programming. Artists receive collaboration and guidance from professional artists, fine art supplies and adaptive equipment. Exposure for artwork includes the gallery, corporate headquarters, alternative spaces, galleries throughout Columbus and local arts festivals. Marketing efforts promote all artists through social media and print materials.

Mission: Empowering artists with disabilities and other barriers through the creation and sale of artwork.
